

The Speech

Grace sat at her desk, feeling more and more nervous. She watched as Maria gave her presentation. Maria was telling the class all about the ancient Egyptians. Grace was impressed by the way Maria's spoke so clearly. She stood tall with her shoulders back, only occasionally looking down at her notes.

Don't rush. Speak clearly. Use eye contact.

Grace knew just what she had to do, but for some reason that all went out the window when she spoke in front of an audience. She knew she had a habit of speaking quickly when she was nervous. Grace had practiced her speech in front of the mirror at home many times. Her speech went for 4 minutes and 10 seconds. She knew from experience that a 4-minute speech in front of a mirror might only last for 2 minutes in front of an audience! She had drawn little turtles on her notes as a reminder for her.

Grace also found keeping eye contact difficult. Looking up at the audience made her anxious. Trying to be helpful, her brother had told her to pretend the audience were in their underwear. Grace didn't really know how that was supposed to help, so she asked her dad for advice. He suggested looking just over the top of the heads of the audience.

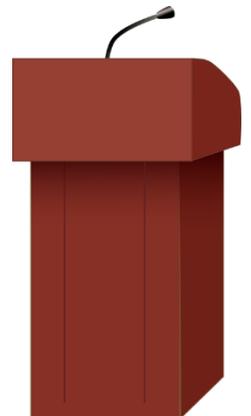

"Thank you for listening," Maria said with a smile.

"Good Job, Maria," Mr Thompson said as the class applauded. "Grace, it's your turn."

Grace took a deep breath. She stood and paused, taking a moment to collect her thoughts.

"Don't rush, speak clearly and use eye contact," she whispered to herself as she walked slowly to the front of the room.

"Good morning boys and girls," Grace said, eyes looking just over the heads of the students in her class. Grace smiled as she thought of the little turtles on her notes.
