

Main Idea

The Book Nook

The Book Nook was only a small store. It was old and there were cheaper stores in which a wider range of books could be found, but many people simply preferred The Book Nook. A tiny bell and a warm smile would greet customers as they pushed open the old wooden door. Everything felt so warm and inviting inside. There was even a reading chair in the back corner. Its leather was faded and torn, but then not much was new in The Book Nook. Perhaps that's another reason people were so fond of it. It had a charm that made people smile.

Patty, the store's owner, knew everything there was to know about books. People came in for recommendations, to learn about authors, to find out about upcoming books, or even just for a chat. Patty was always happy to help however she could.
