Oman brought his water flask up to his lips and took a sip, careful not to spill a drop. He clipped the flask back on his belt and then used the sleeve of his torn shirt to wipe the sweat from his brow. "Not too much further to go," he told himself. He fixed his eyes on the small island of greenery in the sea of sand and continued walking. The temperature was starting to drop, and he noticed his shadow was getting longer and longer. He knew he would have to hurry if he were to reach the Koumia Oasis before dark.
