Show Vs Tell

Show

Writing that 'shows' uses descriptive language, actions and dialogue to bring the story to life. It creates a more memorable reading experience.

For example:

Sniffling, he reached for another tissue.

Tell

Writing that 'tells' is more passive and distant. It simply provides information or summarises events without _immersing the reader in the details.

For example:

He had a runny nose.

Shade orange each card that 'tells'. Shade green each card that 'shows' Each 'tell' card matches to a 'show' card. Find the pairs!

She was feeling so tired she decided to go to bed.	She won the race and was so excited.	Her stomach growled loudly as she eyed the freshly baked pastries.
She was having fun at the playground.	She felt like slamming her pencil down on her desk. This task made no sense to her.	Perched at the water's edge, she cast her line with a graceful flick of her wrist.
She thrust her arms triumphantly into the air as she crossed the finish line.	She was hungry and was craving some pastries.	Her eyelids drooped heavily and her steps became sluggish as she trudged wearily towards the bed.
She was getting frustrated by her work.	Her eyes sparkling with delight as she swung higher and higher on the swing.	She was fishing.

Show Vs Tell Answers

Show

Writing that 'shows' uses descriptive language, actions and dialogue to bring the story to life. It creates a more memorable reading experience.

For example:

Sniffling, he reached for another tissue.

Tell

Writing that 'tells' is more passive and distant. It simply provides information or summarises events without immersing the reader in the details.

For example:

He had a runny nose.

Shade orange each card that 'tells'. Shade green each card that 'shows' Each 'tell' card matches to a 'show' card. Find the pairs!

She was feeling so tired she decided to go to bed.	She won the race and was so excited.	She was hungry and was craving some pastries.
Her eyelids drooped heavily and her steps became sluggish as she trudged wearily towards the bed.	She thrust her arms triumphantly into the air as she crossed the finish line.	Her stomach growled loudly as she eyed the freshly baked pastries.
She was fishing.	She was having fun at the playground.	She was getting frustrated by her work.
Perched at the water's edge, she cast her line with a graceful flick of her wrist.	Her eyes sparkling with delight as she swung higher and higher on the swing.	She felt like slamming her pencil down on her desk. This task made no sense to her.

